I would like to share with your readers my numerous successes due to the help of a talented dowser from the west coast.

My name is Greg Field and I live in the south end of Hartford Connecticut, a city, like many, coping with it's share of problems with crime and juvenile delinquency. These delinquents, typically in their early teens and sometimes younger, are basically left free to do what they please during any given day. This means that they often patrol neighborhoods looking for opportunities and often stealing bicycles to sell for spending money for junk foods and also for drugs. And so we come to my own story. I suffer from bipolar disorder and the accompanying attention deficit hence I am prone such things as short term memory loss and at times forgetting to secure my bicycles against theft. It is on several of those occasions that I have sought out the help of Carl Bracy, a gifted dowser and generous hearted man who has graciously taken the time many times to help me in my quest to recover lost items

The first success I experienced with his help was on an occasion following his advice that two stolen bicycles were still recoverable and were hidden within a few blocks south of my house. This information inspired me to persist in my own detective work which, lo and behold, led me to recover within a few days both bicycles which were in the hands of a known juvenile in my neighborhood.

More recently Carl dowsed for another stolen bike and indicated that it was likely to be a few blocks somewhat northeast of my house. A few days later during the evening, following a sudden hunch, I rode my new bike through the local schoolyard, which was pretty much exactly in the location he had predicted, and found the missing bike stashed in the play area!

I wish therefore to pay tribute with a big thank you to him for his help and dedication, and I hope he receives the recognition that he surely deserves.
